

Ordained: I Have Chosen You

In the midst of parishes closing or being combined with others, with priests taking on greater responsibilities and commitments, and with the possibility of Eucharistic celebration being denied to many, a sudden change takes place. The pope dies and a new one is elected. New hope arises that this leadership will facilitate a shift in requirements for ordination. However, time passes and nothing happens.

Enter a woman, wife and mother of three, who is “pastoring” a Catholic parish in the center of the United States because no priest is available. Without asking or expecting it, she is thrust into the center of a debate about a change in requirements for ordination.

Guaranteed to capture your imagination, this believable piece of fiction encourages hope and stirs the fires of possibility for inclusive church, both locally and in Rome and offers a credible description of how this significant shift could take place.
